

A lot of Dogen's dharma discourses in the Eihei Koroku consist of him quoting someone and then "after a pause" expressing something.

We imagine that he knows what he's going to say. We imagine this because we always do. But we're wrong. True expression has nothing to do with the karmic mind. It comes from a completely different position.